hips—hands in the grand hostess and taken his seat at her right. How jolly he looks, the fat little man! How his round face shines, and his proboscis now begins to glow with the heat of the steam of the feast!

"I must have you on my left, admiral," says the hostess to a hearty gentleman in naval uniform.

"Thank you for my promotion, madam," rejoins Commodore Hotham, mad-dropping into his place.

At the head of her table, then, sits Lady Brothertoft, proud and handsome, flanked by the two chiefs. And down on either side the guests dispose themselves in belated vista.

Major Kerr takes the foot of the table.
He carves well for everybody and best for himself. Two spoonfuls of sauce behold his choice portion of the Albany beef. The liver of the turkey he accepts as carver's perquisites. And when he comes to cut the saddle of venison plenty of delicate little scraps quite too small to offer to others find their way to his plate.

Lucy is at his right. What! in high spirits in gay colors! Has she so soon become a hypocrite and conspirator?
Why, the little dissembler laughs merrily and flirts audaciously! Laughs merrily!
Ah! there are bitter tears just beneath that laugh! If you call tolerating compliments from that young captain at her right flirting, then she is flirting; and she conceals her disgust of her betrayed.

And who is that young captain? He steals into the chair at Lucy's right and begins to talk sentiment before he has had his soup. Who is this fine gentleman of twenty-six, with the oval face, the regular features, the high supercilions nose, the dimpled chin, the hair so carefully powdered and quipped Who is this elegant pet mother? With what studied gesture he airs his ruffled How fleetly he rattles! How easily he expresses himself! He speaks French as if it were his mother tongue. He singles and sighs like an accomplished killer. Who is he?

Major Emmet, of the Heenan Cas-sars, looks across the table at this gay rattle and then whispers to his own neighbor, Lord Rawdon, "Go! dat dat magnificent, Chuck! Anter; how he behaves! de de de de de de de de de de head so long as there's any of the venison left."

"I liked Chuck was id Dodelyvalle or Cherry," says Emmet, wiping that enormous smudge of his—a coarse English article, plentifully mixed with bells—before his mouth.

"He was," replied Rawdon, "and I don't see how he has been doing so here so soon, unless that is his old habit. I suppose he heard that Kerr was coming, and he's been here since he was an alumnus looking for an adjutant and has posted up to offer himself. He didn't know I was to have it Jack is too much hurry to be a great man. His vanity will get him into a scrape some of these days."

Captain Andrew whispered soft nothings to Lucy. And though Kerr glowered tracitously, she listened, much to the amusement of Emmet and Rawdon.
Lucy, perhaps, for the daughter that mamma, at the head of the table, did not detect this byplay! She might have secretly revolt and hastened the marriage. An hour would have brought the Tartar's chaplain; five minutes would have clothed him in his livery and in five more Lucy, at the quipped by the old tyrant, would have slaved "love, honor and obey"—and "died."

She was not always very attentive to her better company.

Sometimes she best forward and looked at her mother, sitting in all her glory between army and navy, and the plummet, her notions of right and wrong, of crime and punishment, would have become really confused.

Questions did indeed drift across her mind.

"I do not succeed in entertaining you, fair lady," says Andrew. "Your thoughts are all for that happy fellow beside you," and he looked with a little scorn toward Kerr, who was applying to Bottle for the boon of wit.

A feeling of inner despair came over poor Lucy as she turned involuntarily and also glanced at the animal. Then she drew away indignantly from the man who had put his little state in her heart.

"Are there no gentlemen in the world?" she thought. "Do men dare to look so and look so at other young ladies?"

"Look ad de de de de de de de de de de Emmet, holding a wine glass before his husky abut as a cover. "Zie is not lullable with Chuck nor wild Gary!"

"A dozen fellows," Rawdon rejoined, behind his glass, "of better blood than Jack and better hearts than Kerr would have cut in there long ago. The daughter is as sweet and pure as a Lily. But who dares marry such a mother-in-law—and he shrugged his shoulders expres-sively toward the hostess.

The hostess now rose and beckoned her daughter.

"I leave you, gentlemen, to your loafs," she said. "Major Kerr will be my representative."

She moved to the door. Army and navy, Allen and Hesse, all sprang to open for her. A murmur of admiration for her beauty and bearing applauded the exit. Lady Brothertoft seemed to be at her climax.

Kerr of course did not let the toast ing.

"The king, gentlemen!"
Cheers! Drank cyathus plenis.
Sir Henry Clinton rises, gleaming star, red nose and all, and proposes, "Our hostess! Bumpers and amen!"

Then they load and fire, fast and furious! The army can hardly gulp fast enough to supply ammunition.

"The army!" "Hoory, hoory!" Cheers from Lord Rawdon.

"The navy!" "Three cheers for Commodore Hotham!"

"The captured forts!" Drank in silence to the memory of Colonel Campbell and Const Grabowski, killed there.

"Luck to Jack Burgoyne!" "Ponting Jack!" Andrew suggests. "May he be a spiller to Schuyler, and fling Gates over the hedge into the ditch!" Laughter and cheers, and immense rattling of glasses to the table.

Here's to General Vaughan and his trip up the river tomorrow! May he add a moral to the Boopis fables!"

Mr. Craig Creelwell, of Big Spring, Ky., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Barlow.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Randall, who have been visiting in Ohio, returned home Saturday.

Miss Eva Herndon, of Brandenburg, came down yesterday to visit Miss Lela LeBlond.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Meador, of Skillman, returned from Jeffersonville, Ind., yesterday.

Mr. Joseph Cushman Jr. and daughter, of Union, Ky., were in the city Sunday shopping.

Miss Anna Gardner, of Hardinsburg, returned to her school at Barboursville last Monday.

J. H. Bablage and wife spent Monday with his father-in-law, Mr. Wm. Dittin, near Brandenburg.

Joe Wetzel's horse was thrown from a horse a few days ago, and had his wrist dislocated by the fall.

Mr. John Dean, of Glenview, spent a few days in this city last week. It was his first visit in six months, and he was surprised at the growth of the old town to that time. He thinks Cloverport has a great future.

Freight shipments over the T. & W. from this city during the month of December were 71 cars coal, 55 cars brick and 47 cars forest products. Total business for the month $3,080.42, an increase over the same month last year of $3,174.91.

The capacity of the Patton Brick works are being increased by the building of twenty new tunnels, each 120 feet long. When these are complete these works will be second to none, and when they open up again they will turn out as many bricks in a day as any plant in the U. S.

Headache is the direct result of indigestion and stomach disorders. Remove these by using Dr. Witt's Little Early Liners, and your headache disappears.

The favorite little pills everywhere. Short & Haynes, Cloverport, and Beard & Deeler, Hardinsburg, Ky.

Never before has there been such great winter sport as within the last week. The skating on Patton's lake has been indulged in by big, little, young and old, white and black, male and female. The elite, poor white trash and niggers have all met on a similar surface (the surface of the lake) and enjoyed themselves to their hearts content.
